MESSAGE FROM OUR LEADERS

As our nation continues to undergo fundamental changes, we find ourselves often alternating between exceptional challenges and momentous triumphs.

Among ACCESS' chief priorities remains our goal to elevate the voice of the Arab American community—regionally and nationally. This past year, we organized MOVE (Mobilize, Organize, Vocalize, Empower)—the first-ever Arab American summit, engaging activists, artists, philanthropists and youth in a shared agenda. We also placed full-time field organizers for our Campaign to TAKE ON HATE in three major U.S. cities. Our Center for Arab American Philanthropy (CAAP) more than doubled its allocation of grants, distributing over 2 million dollars to further empower nonprofits across the country, and our Arab American National Museum (AANM) expanded its impact as well, by hosting over 700,000 patrons who participated in Museum events and exhibits throughout the U.S.

We are dedicated to our revitalization efforts in Southeast Michigan and continue to strengthen our programming throughout the region. We are in the process of establishing another Detroit service center, furthering our commitment to engage communities and improve neighborhoods.

At ACCESS, we believe that positive change can only occur if we stand with one another. By reinforcing this belief, challenging injustice and speaking in one voice, we are building stronger communities, one person at a time.

We are optimistic about the future and remain grounded in our vision for a just and equitable society, with the full participation of Arab Americans. We also stand, unwavering, in our commitment to our mission of empowerment, “From the Neighborhood to the Nation.”

Sincerely,

Hassan Jaber

LOVE CONQUERS ADDICTION

As I was being pulled over for driving erratically, I caught my daughter's eye in the rearview mirror. Knowing that I was under the influence yet again was the pivotal moment where I realized I had a serious problem and needed serious help. My little girl—who I was supposed to love and protect and who was my only source of hope—was in danger because of my addiction. I suffered in silence for more than 10 years because it was culturally taboo for me to discuss my addiction openly. That day, I made the decision that my daughter deserved better.

Deciding to finally admit my addiction openly and ask for help was the most difficult thing I have ever done. Recovering addicts must always remember that relapsing does not equate to failing. During my recovery, I experienced several relapses, but I am here today—three years sober and embraced by ACCESS, which has given me a platform to speak about my experiences and help others through my Peer Recovery Coach position.

ACCESS helped me to understand that I was dealing with a disease and my experience was nothing to be ashamed of. They inspired me to share my story, as it could save lives. I want to eliminate the stigma surrounding addiction and let people know that they are not alone. Three years ago, I was an addict. Today, I am a father, a son, a brother, a mentor, an advocate and an inspiration to my daughter. My mission is to help cure this disease once and for all.

HEALTH

ACCESS, through its array of medical, behavioral and public health programming, along with its numerous research initiatives, strives to ensure that every man, woman and child has the support they need to thrive and enhance their quality of life. Through a comprehensive and culturally-sensitive approach that promotes healthy minds, healthy bodies and healthy communities, our team is committed to improving the overall well-being of every person we serve.

In partnership with the Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan Foundation, ACCESS developed an innovative way to combat hookah use in the community, specifically among youth. The “Quit Hookah” mobile app provides the support and motivation hookah users need to quit smoking, allowing our Community Health and Research Center staff to directly assist those who seek help, through their smartphone.

ACCESS promotes the importance of health awareness to workforce development clients that seek economic independence, giving them the necessary skills to build a stronger family unit. In partnership with the Detroit Health Department and the Detroit Employment Solutions Corporation, we offered Infant Safe Sleep Parenting classes to 216 families.

As part of our ongoing commitment to promote the well-being of youth in local schools, ACCESS partnered with the Lions Club Chapter at the University of Michigan-Dearborn to provide free vision screenings to 650 students during our annual Back-to-School Fair and the Dearborn Homecoming Festival.

ACCESS assists clients that have serious mental illness or are struggling with substance abuse, by helping them to secure employment through intensive case management and one-on-one coaching that focuses on skill enhancement, resume development, interview skills, and ongoing support. A multi-disciplinary team works with employers, case managers and therapists to ensure our client's transition from economic dependence, to sustainable and successful employment.

FROM COMMUNITY SERVICE TO COMMUNITY EMPOWERMENT

Education was always the biggest priority for my immigrant parents, but transportation to school was a consistent challenge. My father was a taxi driver whose job and its demands prevented him from providing us with regular transportation. Since his job was our only source of income, we somehow always found alternate ways to get to and from school. Understanding the sacrifices my parents made, I committed myself to my studies and after-school programs.

In my quest to give back, I came across ACCESS' JIRON (Join In to Revitalize Our Neighborhoods) program, which allowed me to lead and participate in workshops that promote diversity and community building. I met many students with the same challenges and had the opportunity to teach and learn from them.

By giving me the opportunity to help others, ACCESS helped me discover my passion for community empowerment, which has now turned into a career aspiration. I am currently enrolled at Michigan State University and studying business, with the hopes of starting my own nonprofit someday. ACCESS' commitment to my personal success is what inspired me to dedicate my life to the service of others.

EDUCATION

Education remains a key component of ACCESS' mission to empower communities. We provide children, adolescents and adults with the necessary skills to become tomorrow's leaders. Our innovative programs focus on academic enrichment, workforce preparedness, and health and wellness.

In partnership with the National Kidney Foundation of Michigan, ACCESS' Workforce Development Team facilitated multiple sessions of the Bodyworks program, which is designed to improve family eating and activity habits and to promote healthier decision-making.

This year, the AANM 9/11 Anniversary Town Hall highlighted the 75th anniversary of the World War II Japanese American Internment and drew correlations to the Muslim Ban in 2017. The dialogue helped bring together members of various communities to further unite them on the relevant issue of challenging biased policies that target marginalized communities.

Our WIC (Women, Infants and Children) program served approximately 8,000 clients and impacted the lives of over 6,000 children under the age of 5, through both our Wayne and Macomb county locations. Case managers conduct routine check-ins, with a focus on providing supplemental food, professional nutrition education and referrals based on health screenings and assessment of need.

ACCESS remains committed to investing in our future leaders. A cohort of diverse high school students are chosen to participate in our Arab American Youth Leadership program, developed to foster the leadership of Arab American youth with a special emphasis on personal, social and community identity development. Through this unique program, students are taught the importance of community building, intergroup relations and college preparation skills.

ONE COMMUNITY, ONE VOICE, ONE GOAL

“Why are our schools filling with undocumented Middle Easterners...we need to restrict Middle Eastern immigration...Middle Easterners don’t integrate well into the U.S.,” proclaimed Palos Hills, Illinois School Board Trustee Sharon Brannigan in a series of social media posts. Brannigan, a public official, elected to serve, support and empower her community, had broken her promise to her constituents.

Led by the Campaign to TAKE ON HATE Chicago Team and two of our National Network for Arab American Communities (NNAAC) member organizations—Arab American Family Services and the Arab American Action Network—the reaction to Brannigan’s xenophobic remarks was swift. It included a campaign of over 7 demonstrations, a social media hashtag titled #RESIGNBRANNIGAN that went viral, a petition with over 1,000 signatures, and a community vow to protest at every Palos Township board meeting until Brannigan resigns.

#RESIGNBRANNIGAN has developed into a legitimate movement that has brought together the Palos Hills community and other marginalized communities in the wake of the ever rising popularity of hateful rhetoric that has been aimed at our nation’s most vulnerable communities. This movement serves as a powerful example of what unity in action looks like: an unstoppable campaign that demands justice, accountability and the equal protection of every person.

Follow #RESIGNBRANNIGAN or #TAKEONHATE to learn more about the on going efforts of our TAKE ON HATE Team.

CIVIC ENGAGEMENT

One of the greatest tools in ACCESS' fight for a just and equitable society is its commitment to civic engagement and advocacy. Youth and adults alike are empowered to improve their communities through leadership development, voter engagement, education on racial and gender equity and community service projects.

The AANM joined forces with the Jim Crow Museum for Racist Memorabilia to expand its THEM exhibition to feature updated artifacts and images that have been historically stereotypical of Arab Americans, Muslims and other marginalized communities. Featuring a part of this exhibit at the AANM helped to both highlight the shared struggle of these communities and showcase how objects that have fostered bias and discrimination in the past, can lead to open dialogue and engagement in the present.

ACCESS and its Campaign to TAKE ON HATE joined over 4 million demonstrators in the streets of Washington D.C. on January 21, 2017, as an official partner of the now historic Women's March.

On the heels of the highly biased and discriminatory attempt by the White House to implement a ban on travel from Muslim-majority countries, ACCESS and its Campaign to TAKE ON HATE (TOH) organized an emergency town hall meeting, addressing the concerns of over 1,200 Detroit area community members in attendance, and sharing “Know Your Rights” information to help the public respond effectively to the ban. This event was one in a series organized by TOH to share resources and tools with surrounding communities, so as to increase and strengthen advocacy around issues of concern.

Thousands of volunteers across 10 states came together for the National Network for Arab American Communities’ (NNAAC) 13th Annual National Arab American Service Day. The 19 extensive community projects included helping build a community park in Detroit, MI; a community garden in Brooklyn, NY; and a two-day project, packaging food and delivering to the elderly in Atlanta, GA.

IF A SPACE DOES NOT EXIST FOR US, WE WILL CREATE ONE

One of my fondest memories as a child is of my mother sharing stories with us at dinner about her scientific work. The topics weren't always very appetizing, as they often included laboratory dissections, but my mother was no ordinary woman. She was revolutionary. Her revolution came in the form of her practice of science in a world that dictates how so many young women—especially women of color—should think, act, work and live. I knew that I wanted to follow in her footsteps.

College was the clear pathway to realizing my dreams, but it was also a major financial roadblock for my family. My mother was the sole breadwinner at the time, and I simply could not afford a college education without putting myself and my family in a very difficult position.

Fortunately, I was introduced to the legacy of another revolutionary woman. Like my mother, she too defied all cultural and societal expectations. The late Dr. Adawia Alousi was a pioneering researcher, educator and award-winning scientist, and her family had chosen the Center for Arab American Philanthropy (CAAP) at ACCESS to house her scholarship fund, The Dr. Adawia Alousi STEM Scholarship Fund for Muslim Women. It was through this fund that CAAP awarded me and 10 other Muslim women of color scholarships to pursue our dreams. This meant that higher education no longer came at an impossible cost to us.

I am grateful that my journey has been paved by revolutionary, brilliant women like my mother, who helped me to dream big, and Dr. Alousi, who helped make those dreams come true.

PHILANTHROPY

As a community nonprofit, ACCESS has experienced firsthand how powerful and inspirational strategic philanthropy is for our communities, both as a means to build sustainable institutions and to strengthen the positive impact of Arab Americans nationwide. The Center for Arab American Philanthropy (CAAP) engages Arab Americans across the nation in giving strategically to the issues and causes they care most about. By providing individuals and families with the tools and resources to be more impactful in their giving, CAAP, the only Arab American community foundation in the U.S., empowers Arab Americans to be active participants in building a just and equitable society through philanthropy.

The Building Blocks for New Americans Fund was established at the Center for Arab American Philanthropy (CAAP) to serve Syrian, Iraqi and Yemeni refugees as they settle in the United States as New Americans. The initial campaign in Southeast Michigan raised more than $250,000 to support 25 families. Through a series of fundraising initiatives, and with the help of many dedicated individuals, CAAP has exceeded the original fundraising goal and expanded the program to Houston, where an additional $50,000 was raised to serve even more families in need.

Thanks to the Russell J. Ebeid Family Trust's generous contribution to the Arab American Community Archives endowment, our Arab American National Museum (AANM) archive is currently comprised of more than two dozen manuscript and photograph collections—some with more than 1,000 items—that help document our community's history. The Russell J. Ebeid Library & Resource Center also houses the AANM's oral history collection, which includes short family videos, titled Digital Scrapbooks. Mr. Ebeid's contribution has given our diverse community a platform to share their stories and preserve them for future generations.

To demonstrate the power of collective giving, more than 120 Arab American women came together for the Center for Arab American Philanthropy's (CAAP) Annual 100 Arab American Women Who Care event and raised $10,000 in support of a unique exhibit, titled 1001 Inventions. This exhibit showcased the legacy of scientific and cultural achievements of the Arab World, dating back to the 7th century and became the most viewed exhibit ever featured at the Michigan Science Center.

REEL STORIES

Finding my voice has been a lifelong journey. I've always had so many opinions and ideas that I wanted to share with the world, but I never knew how. Growing up in a traditional Arab American community, I never wanted to take the expected career path of a doctor or engineer. That wasn't where my heart belonged.

In the summer of 2017, I joined the Arab American National Museum's (AANM) SURA program—where I discovered my love of photography, and the Reel Stories program—where I developed a passion for filmmaking. I was paired with a group of young women that are now my best friends. We discussed everything, from demanding the representation of women of color in art and media, to our own personal struggles. Together, we produced a film, titled Asfoura, which went on to premiere at both the Palestine and Sundance Film Festivals. Our film opened the door to so many opportunities, including an invitation to the White House, a personal opportunity to be selected to sit on the Youth Council of the Smithsonian Institution and, most importantly, the opportunity to find our voices in a field that is desperately devoid of the perspectives of women and people of color.

I am now focused on studying to become a human rights attorney and a photographer. My goal is simple: to empower others and tell their stories, so that young girls like me can be inspired to do the same.

ARTS & CULTURE

ACCESS is deeply committed to serving our communities through a comprehensive, holistic approach, which includes engagement with arts and culture. Our crown jewel, the Arab American National Museum (AANM) is a Smithsonian Affiliate and the only institution in the nation that tells the story of the Arab American experience. While AANM is the centerpiece of our artistic programs, the arts are used throughout our more than 120 programs to heal, empower and engage.

The Concert of Colors (CoC)—AANM's free five-day diversity music festival—held every year in Detroit—celebrated a milestone this year, marking its 25th anniversary. Presenting music from all over the world in the heart of Detroit's Midtown, the CoC coincided with the 50th anniversary of the historic Detroit Rebellion and helped bring together the region's diverse communities by including engaging programming on relevant social issues. This year's festival drew over 50,000 people.

AANM launched its Artists + Residence Program, a collaborative project with City Hall Artspace Lofts. The program gives artists from both the Arab American community and the Arab World an opportunity to advance their skills by exploring new ideas and drawing inspiration from the community that surrounds the Museum. The first AANM artist housed at Artspace was Saudi-based Palestinian Artist Ayman Yossri Daydban, who was featured in the temporary AANM exhibition, Epicenter X: Saudi Contemporary Art.

Art and dance have often been used as forms of peaceful, yet powerful, protest. In response to the discriminatory Muslim Travel Ban, TAKE ON HATE New York partnered with NNAAC member organization, the Arab American Family Support Center (AAFSC) and The Illuminator to present Stomp Out the Muslim Ban, an art protest and dance rally in New York. This distinctive rally featured the large-scale projection of people dancing the traditional Arabic dance of dabke onto the exterior of the Brooklyn Borough Hall. The project was accompanied by a rally during which participants were invited to share the impact that anti-Muslim bigotry has had on them and those in their circles.

ACCESS was honored to join 11 organizations selected by Broadway actor and creator of Hamilton, Lin-Manuel Miranda, as part of the Immigrants: We get the job done! Coalition that was launched in 2017 to bring greater attention to immigrants in the U.S. The launch of the coalition was announced through a nationwide contest, championed by Miranda, challenging people to post a video of themselves online, singing their favorite Hamilton song and donating to support the Coalition. The campaign raised $1 million in support of the member organizations who work with immigrant communities across the U.S.

NEW AMERICANS AND A NEW MEANING OF “HOME”

What makes a place your home? Is it where you grew up? Is it where your most cherished memories are? Is it within a community that comes together to show you that you deserve a new life? We tried our best to navigate through the devastating war in Syria, but after being forced to seek refuge in a Jordanian camp, we found that turning a campsite into a home was just not possible for us. Our surroundings were a constant reminder that we were neither citizens, homeowners or community members. We were refugees.

My wife and our three children gathered what little belongings we had and left Jordan in search of a place to call home in America. This move was much more difficult than we imagined. We struggled to navigate through a country that was completely unfamiliar to us. It was beyond difficult to make ends meet. We were in financial crisis, and I was constantly worried about my family and our survival. As we were about to reach our breaking point, ACCESS, through its Building Blocks for New Americans (BBNA) program, reached out to us and changed our lives.

ACCESS embraced us as New Americans, rather than refugees. They supported us financially, by helping us secure jobs and personal transportation. They assisted with the educational needs of our children, and they gave us something that we had long been searching for—a feeling of what a real home is. There are some gifts you can't put a price tag on. ACCESS was finally able to give us a place in this world that did not feel temporary. What makes a place feel like home? It's the people who furnish it with hope, love and promise.

“

ACCESS embraced us as New Americans. They supported us financially, by helping us secure jobs and personal transportation. They assisted with the educational needs of our children, and they gave us something that we had long been searching for—a feeling of what a real home is.

ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT

An empowered community is one that invests in the independence and self-sufficiency of its members, by providing access to fulfilling economic opportunities. At ACCESS, we utilize innovative approaches to provide the communities we serve with comprehensive employment services, entrepreneurship and small business support, as well as financial literacy education, with a special focus on contributing to the revitalization of Southeast Michigan.

ACCESS to Earn—an integrated English as a Second Language (ESL) and skills-based entrepreneurial training program for immigrant women in southwest Detroit—provided foundational entrepreneurship training and hands-on sewing skills classes to 51 students. These incredible women learned measuring, patterning, cutting and how to use a sewing machine. The program culminated in these students hosting a marketplace in which they showcased their products and led workshops that allowed for them to share their business plans with over 200 people in attendance.

Our Employment and Training Department held its Spring and Autumn Annual Job Fairs in Dearborn, Mich., offering over 2,500 local job seekers the opportunity to meet and interact with over 100 local employers who were actively hiring at each event.

Nearly 500 guests attended the Community Health and Research Center's 11th Annual Domestic Violence Awareness Dinner, honoring Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Proceeds from this annual fundraiser help support the critical services that ACCESS provides to over 300 survivors and their families, as they work toward self-sufficiency and independence from their abusers. These services include comprehensive medical, psychosocial, economic and legal support.

*ACCESS is a Michigan Works! One-Stop Service Center and a proud partner of the American Job Center Network

MOVE

MOBILIZE • ORGANIZE • VOCALIZE • EMPOWER

ACCESS and its three national institutions—the Arab American National Museum (AANM), the National Network for Arab American Communities (NNAAC) and the Center for Arab American Philanthropy (CAAP)—hosted MOVE (Mobilize, Organize, Vocalize, Empower), a first-of-its-kind event that brought together over 500 changemakers and key allies from all corners of the country to explore intersectionality in a safe environment, engaging in dialogue on a wide range of issues that impact Arab Americans. AANM’s DIWAN—a biennial forum that provides a safe space for artists, scholars and performers—was also a part of the three-day summit. The contagious energy was felt throughout the conference as Arab American artists, philanthropists, activists, community organizations, youth and allies came together in this unprecedented convening to collaborate on the issues that MOVE them to action.

“

Whatever notions there are about a better tomorrow, they will only be notions until the Arab American community is a part of that promising future.
